DeLoughrey demonstrates how the Anthropocene and empire are mutually constitutive parallel development of English anti-black racism. From there, she moves from realms of representation to reality in order to illuminate the physical, emotional, and economic impacts of the transatlantic slave trade. In Doing Slavery and Abolition B, Carey 2004-05-25 Discourses of Slavery and Abolition bring together for the first time the most important strands of current thinking on the relationship between slavery and categories of writing, oratory and visual culture in the long eighteenth-century. The book begins by examining writing about slavery and race by both philosophers and literary authors such as Aphra Behn. It considers self-representation in the works of Ignatius Sancho, Olaudah Equiano, and Olaudah Equiano’s anonymous assistant. It then moves on to the abolitionist movements of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth centuries, moving beyond traditional accounts of the documents of that movement to show how reading, writing, literature and the relationship between art and politics.

Creole No-Beina Edmondson 2022-01-20 This book is a history of Creole, or ‘dialect’, literature and performance in the English-speaking Caribbean. It revisits the common view that the literary dialect in the Caribbean was a relatively modern twentieth-century phenomenon, and explores both the lives and the literary texts of a number of early proponents.

Forbidden Fruits-Renato Toni 2008

Perspectives on the ‘Other America’-2009-01-01 Uniting critical writing on novels, poetry, painting, and ritual, this volume takes a regional approach to the cultural discourses that inform the Anglophone Caribbean literature. It examines the inter-relationship between the specificities of the region and the universal tropes that are continually replicated, by the novel, Separate, George Lamming, and Jean Rhys, the short story, by Jean Rhys, the short story, and the narrative, by the narrative, and the performance, by the performance, and the parodic, by the parodic, and the literary, by the literary, and the political, by the political, and the aesthetic, by the aesthetic, and the economic, by the economic, and the social, by the social, and the cultural, by the cultural. Through these essays, the contributors trace the ways in which the region’s unique history and culture have shaped the development of the literary and cultural production of the Caribbean, and the ways in which this production has in turn shaped the region’s history and culture.

Creole Testimonies-N. Aijal 2012-01-01 Analyzes the relationships among the socio-historical contexts, generic forms, and rhetorical strategies of British West Indian slave narratives. Grounded by the systemic theories of realism and testimony it breaks new ground by drawing these dictatorial and narrative strategies on their own terms as examples of ‘voice testimony’.

Between Fitness and Death-Stefanie Hunt-Kennedy 2020-04-13 Long before the English became involved in the African slave trade, they imagined themselves as monstrous and deformed beings. The English drew on pre-existing European ideas about monstrosity and deformity to argue that Africans were a monstrous race, a race of subhumans. The English used these ideas to justify their exploitation of the African population.

Colonization of English America-Trevor Burnard 2010-06-01 This book provides a comprehensive and deep understanding of the processes by which the British colonized and transformed the New World in the late sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It explores the social, political, economic, and cultural transformations that took place in the Americas in this period, and how these changes were shaped by the British desire to expand their control over the world.

Slaves to Sovereignty-Carl Pope 2013-08-15 Literary and sociological studies have long been fascinated by the seemingly innocuous substance of sugar, not least in the English-speaking Caribbean. In this book, Carl Pope offers a comprehensive and detailed study of the role of sugar in shaping the lives of enslaved people and their descendants in the Caribbean and beyond.

Origins of Slavery: Oxford Bibliographies Online Research Guide-Oxford University Press 2010-06-01 This is a selective guide designed to help scholars and students of the history of slavery to make sense of the rich and complex literature on the subject. In the context of the book, the essays provide bibliographic information and offer suggestions about which sources to consult and editorial commentary to make it clear how the cited sources are interrelated. This book is just one of many articles from Oxford Bibliographies Online: Atlantic History, a continuously updated and growing online resource designed to provide authoritative guidance through the scholarship and other materials relevant to the study of Atlantic History, the study of the transatlantic connections between the Americas and the Atlantic world, and the study of the modern era. Increased attention to issues concerning natural resources, conservation, epidemiology, and climate have now made it clear that the environment and ecology of the Caribbean a central historical concern. Sea and Land is an effort to integrate that research in a new general environmental history of the region. It explores the mixing, movement, and displacement of peoples and the parallel ecological mixing of animals, plants, microbes from Africa, Europe, Asia, and the Americas.

Jahajib-Frank Brinsah 2000 Indians have lived in the Caribbean for more than a hundred and sixty years, ever since they took to the ships to work on the sugar plantations of the region. Yet despite this long history of migration, the indigenous peoples of the Caribbean have never been a significant part of the population. In fact, the contribution of the indigenous peoples to the development of the region has been largely ignored. In this book, Jahajib Frank Brinsah provides a comprehensive and detailed study of the role of sugar in shaping the lives of enslaved people and their descendants in the Caribbean and beyond.
