The Margin of Appreciation

fundamental rights. The issue of conflicting rights is examined in both domestic and international human rights law, and deals with many different types of human rights, including economic and social rights. The goal of the conference was to examine the matter at a general level, above specific conflicts such as those between freedom of expression and the right to non-discrimination, or between religious freedom and women's rights. The international conference on conflicts

Conflicts Between Fundamental Rights

The Rule of Law in Europe: Rethinking Article 15

The law in Europe has been put under strain by both external and internal threats. The term “illiberal democracies” is sometimes used to describe the rise of a phenomenon in which the fundamental values of the European legal order, as enshrined in the European Convention of Human Rights and the case-law, are increasingly challenged. The book discusses how this is achieved, and how the rule of law can be defended. The contributors provide their perspectives on the legitimacy and/or the protective potential of interim measures and other (quasi-)judicial bodies in response to requests by individuals and organisations in the context of issues that are unpopular with governments and/or controversial within society, which has led states to at times employ political pressure to limit the use of such measures.

The Margin of Appreciation and the Principle of Proportionality in the Jurisprudence of the ECtHR

The book develops a broader historical perspective as well as offering into a range of substantial areas. This book is of great interest to academics specialised in international law, political scientists, international officials working for both international organisations and non-governmental organisations, and legal practitioners (legal counsels of States). The book offers a refreshingly well-informed approach to the contentious issues of the role, legal status and consequences of NGOs in international law.
